

High angular resolution observations of Active Galactic Nuclei

Alessandro Marconi, Dip. Di Fisica e Astronomia, Università di Firenze

I will review the current status of high angular resolution observations of Active Galactic Nuclei and their impact on our knowledge of the inner structure of AGN, from dusty tori to broad line regions, accretion disks and central supermassive black holes. In particular, I will focus on results from AO assisted observations and optical interferometry.